THE BATTLE-FIELD.

Yeal a battle's a very fine thing, while you' fighting, The same ups and downs are very exciting But a sombre sight is a battle-field, To the sad survivor's sorrowing eye When those who scorned to fly or yield,

In one promiscuous carnage lie; When the cannon's roar Is heard no more. And the thick dun smoke has rolled away, And the victor comes for the last survey, Of the well-fought field of yesterday!

No triumphs flush that hanglity brow No proud exulting look is there, His eagle glance is humbled now, As earthward, in auxious care It seeks the form whose stalwart pride But yesterday morn was by his side!

And there it lies on yonder band Of corses, which themselves had breath But yester morn-now cold and dark. With other dews than those of death ! Powerless as It had ne'er been born, The hand that clasped his yester morn!

And there are widows wandering there, That roam the blood besprinkled plain, And listen in their dumb despair For sounds they ne'er may hear again ! One word, however, faint or low, Ay, e'en a groan—were music now! And this is glory !—Fame!
